

CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

Stephen Castle has been the Brussels correspondent of The Independent since 1998. Before that, he was political editor of The Independent on Sunday and worked in Westminster for nine years.

John Chambers is chairman and CEO of Cisco Systems. Since assuming the role of CEO in January 1995 he has grown the company from $1.2 billion in annual revenues to approximately $30 billion today. In November 2006, he was named Chairman of the Board.

David Charter became Europe correspondent of The Times in September 2006 after four years as chief political correspondent. He worked on UK regional newspapers and the Times Higher Education Supplement before joining The Times in 1995.

Philip Gordon is director of the Center on the United States and Europe at the Brookings Institution. He is a former director for European affairs at the US National Security Council and is author and co-editor of Crescent of Crisis: US-European Strategy for the Greater Middle East (2006).

David Gow is The Guardian's European business editor. He returned to Brussels in 2004 after a 26-year absence. He has also been the paper's education editor, Bonn correspondent, business news editor and industrial editor.

Will Hutton is a columnist for the Observer, chief executive of The Work Foundation, and an author of a number of bestselling books on economics. His new book, The Writing on the Wall: China and the 21st Century is published in January by Little, Brown.

Geoff Meade is European editor of PA News and has been covering EU affairs in Brussels for more than 20 years. He is also well-known in Brussels as a columnist and comedy writer.

Anand Menon is professor of European politics and director of the European Research Institute, University of Birmingham, Britain's largest academic centre for European studies. From 1996 to 2001, he was university lecturer in European politics, Oxford University.

David Miliband is the UK secretary of state for environment, food and rural affairs. He was previously minister for communities and local government, minister for the Cabinet Office and minister of state for schools. Before becoming an MP in 2001, he was head of the Prime Minister's Policy Unit.

Wolfgang Münchau is associate editor and a commentator on European economic and political affairs for the Financial Times, based in Brussels. He was previously co-editor of the Financial Times Deutschland. He is also co-founder and director of eurointelligence.com.

Andrew Osborn has been The Independent's Moscow correspondent since April 2004. He covered the Beslan school siege, Ukraine's 'Orange' revolution and has reported from Chechnya. Before that he was The Guardian's Europe correspondent in Brussels for four years.

George Parker is the Brussels bureau chief of the Financial Times. He was formerly the newspaper's UK news editor and a political correspondent at Westminster. He started his career on the Western Morning News in the south west of England.

John Parker is the bureau chief of The Economist in Brussels and is author of the magazine's column on European affairs, Charlemagne. From 1998 to 2005, he was the magazine's bureau chief in Washington, DC.

Zandria Pauncefort is chief executive of the Institute for Citizenship, which promotes democracy and 21st-century citizenship through projects and research. Past appointments include chair of an NHS Hospital Trust and chair of the South and West Audit Consortium.

Nicola Smith is a freelance journalist working for The Sunday Times and The Scotsman in Brussels, specialising in EU affairs. Before becoming a journalist, she worked as a research assistant in the European Parliament.

Philip Stephens is associate editor and chief political commentator of the Financial Times. He writes twice-weekly columns on British and foreign affairs, and is an author of a recent biography of Tony Blair. He is also a well-known broadcaster.

Craig Winneker is a writer based in Brussels. He was previously Europe editor of TCS Daily and deputy editor of European Voice. Before coming to Brussels in 2000, he was senior editor of Capital Style magazine and managing editor of Roll Call newspaper in Washington.

